The final volume in the trilogy feminist science-fiction fans have been waiting for.

Originally published in 1984, this classic dystopian trilogy is a testament to the power of language and women's collective action. The interstellar Consortium of Planets forsakes the irredeemably violent Earth, condemning the planet to economic and ecological chaos. Given one last chance to halt Earth's annihilation, women freedom fighters discover a way to rid Earth of men ' s brutality—but it may have come too late. In the stunning conclusion to the Native unpopulated and two off-world humans, Anna and Joe, are sent to Earth to establish a new colony. Sequel to 'Parkland', this second volume in a loosely linked trilogy is followed by 'Fire Dancer'. The award-winning author's other publications include 'Forbidden Paths of Thual'.

Earthsong is the second novel (after Parkland) in a loosely linked trilogy about Earth in some distant future, when humans are still learning about responsibility, freedom, and caring concern. Anna and Joe have been sent from the distant planet that has been home to humanity for thousands of years, with the responsibility of caring for a cargo of still-unborn babies who are to repopulate the planet. Ages 12 plus.
