Human Rights Overboard is themed in four key ways: The journey into detention, processing of refugee claims, detention and life after detention. The evidence presented to the People's Inquiry, which is documented in the book through the stories of those with experience of detention, stands as a clear condemnation of government policies which damaged and, in some cases, destroyed the men, women and children who fled brutal regimes and asked for help.

The focus of Human Rights Overboard, nevertheless, is on the treatment of asylum seekers subject to immigration detention. Between November 1992 and July 2008, the policy of mandatory detention provided that all asylum seekers who arrived in Australia by boat without a valid entry visa would be kept in immigration detention until their applications for protection were granted, or they were removed from the country.
