Nissan Murano (2008) review | CAR Magazine

The first Murano arrived in the UK in 2005 after two successful years on sale in North America. While it was a good 4x4 that drove very much like a car it was hampered by the lack of a diesel engine. This second-generation model (launched in 2008) is a far more polished effort than the original and, thankfully, a 2.5-litre diesel has also been added to the line-up in 2010.

The second generation Murano, introduced here in January 2009, carried the same overall theme as the original shape. However, it sat on a new platform that gave it added rigidity and an even quieter ride. Seating was even more spacious and the boot gained significantly more volume. The 3.5 V6 was reworked to give it more power and torque.
